The New Hampshire Art Educators Association has named Troy Corriveau as the New Hampshire Art Educator of the Year for 2023-2024. Troy is an art teacher at Prospect Mountain High School in Alton, NH., where he brings a solid knowledge of teaching practices, endless creative energy, and a deep caring for his students. Troy is the advisor for the National Art Honor Society, a department head and curriculum leader. He encourages all of his students to participate in programs such as The Scholastic Art Awards of NH and the statewide Student Art Month program, as well as local exhibitions of their work. Catherine Fraser, Library Media Specialist, comments: “Troy advocates strongly for his programs. He participates in the (school) leadership team, and was instrumental in the design of the new schedule implemented this year at Prospect Mountain. Troy always keeps the integrity of his program foremost in his mind.” Troy also contributes his creative energy and teaching skill to higher education as an adjunct faculty member.
